Luis:

As of March 10th there were approximately 12,000 voter registration applications that have been rejected since the proof of citizenship requirements went into effect. The $.25 rate is for basic copies—copies of Voter Registrations are $1.00 each due to the time taken to redact the personal information from each record. (A copy is made of the original, the information redacted, and then a second copy is made.) Pursuant to A.R.S. § 16-168(F), certain information provided on a voter registration form is confidential unless an exception applies: “...the month and day of birth date, the social security number or any portion thereof, the driver license number or nonoperating identification license number, the unique identifying number prescribed by this section, the Indian census number, the father's name or mother's maiden name, the state or country of birth and the records containing a voter's signature shall not be accessible or reproduced. . . .”

I asked the Elections Dept for an estimate on the amount of time that would be needed to produce the records. The Department said that a time frame is more difficult to estimate because they have not had to reproduce 12,000 records in the past.

Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions.

Thank you for the information. Since Maricopa does not keep a list of names of rejected applications, could you please provide us the costs of sending copies of the voter registration applications of voters that were rejected for lack of documentation without the other materials requested previously.

OPINION

Prop. 200 causing voter registration rejections
The star's view: The law targeted illegal entrants. But verifying identification is more difficult, and nearly 1,500 potential Pima County voters have been rejected.

Tucson, Arizona | Published: 08.22.2005

Tucson voters for the first time probably will have to show some form of identification when they cast ballots in the November election. It's an intrusive and completely unnecessary requirement resulting from the passage of ill-conceived Proposition 200 in November.

But voters don't have to go through the hassle of proving who they are when they vote. In fact, they don't have to go to the polls on Election Day at all. They can join the growing numbers of voters who would rather cast a mail-in ballot.

The numbers choosing to cast a mail-in ballot has gone up dramatically in Pima County in the past few years. In 2002, 103,018 early ballots were cast. But in 2004, that number climbed to 173,267.

Mail-in ballots are becoming the preferred method of voting because it is convenient. Now, it's a way to get around the hassle of Prop. 200, which requires people to provide proof of residency to receive some state services.

Included in the law is that everyone show identification when casting a ballot. But mailing in a ballot without showing identity is possible because the law grandfathered all registered voters at the time it took effect. Voters passed Prop 200 by a 12-point margin in November.

It was and remains racist, because it targets and denies some public benefits to people living illegally in the country. The problem is there has been little proof that illegal entrants have been voting.

Opponents of the measure, believing it went so far as to punish the children of people living here illegally, filed suit to have the law struck down.

Advocates of Prop. 200 prevailed. And just last week Gov. Janet Napolitano and state Attorney General Terry Goddard, both Democrats, approved the new voting rules.

Prop. 200, as feared, has prevented potential voters from registering. As of last week, more than a thousand people in Pima County had been turned down in their voter registration applications. According to the County Recorder's Office, 1,492 applications for registration have been denied, and 3,330 have been approved since April, when it began keeping track of the numbers.

Yet the numbers this year are small compared to the applications processed by the Recorder's Office during the 2004 presidential election year.

During the same period last year, the office registered 33,739 new voters, without rejecting a single one. If Prop. 200 had been in effect then, the Recorder's Office says it would have rejected 10,459 new voter applications.

The law also discourages voter drives, a long-standing way to sign up and encourage new voters. And it makes verification of identity difficult in common scenarios, something as simple as a woman who took her husband's name upon marriage.

The interests of democracy are served when the state eases access to voting. Arizona has chosen to go the other way and make voting harder.

Although it is now too late to register to vote in the city's primary election next month, it is not too late to register for the election in November.

All it takes is a request for a registration form from the County Recorder's Office. The forms are also available online.

County Recorder F. Ann Rodriguez is available to speak to groups about the changes and how to register new voters.
To get in touch with her office, call 740-4356. To get a copy of an application or to request an early voting ballot, go to her Web site www.recorder.pima.gov/default.html
